to the Council
Rule 130
Hugues Bayet (S&D)

Subject: Exchange of information on judicial and police cooperation

In response to the tragic events in Paris, the Council, meeting on 20 November, approved a number of measures necessary to strengthen judicial and police cooperation.

This last point is clearly imperative if the intention is to guarantee the security of European citizens as effectively as possible. Member States have a duty to stock up the data banks and exploit the results to the most telling effect possible.

The Standing Committee on Internal Security and the Counterterrorism Coordinator have been called upon to implement the measures agreed.

1. Given the crucial importance of these measures, will the Council keep their implementation under permanent review? What schedule will it adopt for that purpose?
2. When assessments are made, will the Council draw attention to any failure by a Member State to share internal security information?
