

Question for written answer E-014484/2015
to the Commission

Rule 130

Santiago Fisas Ayxelà (PPE) and Esther Herranz García (PPE)

Subject: Report on food products imported into Europe

The fact that there is no genuine common framework for general food legislation at international level (Codex, OIE) means that there are huge differences between our trading partners as regards supervision, traceability and the practices that food producers are allowed to use.

Does the Commission have information indicating that food is legally being imported into Europe despite the fact that it is produced using techniques (in particular in the livestock farming sector) that are banned in some or all EU Member States?

Does the Commission have information indicating that food is legally being imported into Europe despite the fact that it is produced using agricultural chemicals that are banned in some or all EU Member States?