

Question for written answer E-015202/2015
to the Commission
Rule 130
David Casa (PPE)

Subject: EU preparedness in the face of radicalisation and terrorism

The latest terrorist attack in France has once again exposed the EU's vulnerability to terrorist attacks and the need to tackle terrorism and radicalisation at its core. A number of measures and actions taken at EU level have already been set out in the Commission's answer of 28 September 2015 to my Parliamentary question E-010716/2015. Does the Commission still believe that these measures are indeed enough to address these problems? How can the EU be better prepared, especially considering that both the attackers and those arrested were generally known to security officials in the Member States?