

Question for written answer E-015993/2015
to the Commission
Rule 130
István Ujhelyi (S&D)

Subject: How can Brussels take revenge?

"Brussels' revenge is in vain. Hungary will continue to reject the European Union's resettlement quota because it threatens our culture, jeopardises our security and spreads terrorism." This was said by János Halász, Member of Parliament and spokesman for the Fidesz Group in Parliament. Mr Halász was responding to the infringement procedure the European Commission opened against Hungary over the refugee regulation. According to Halász, this is Brussels' revenge for Hungary contesting the EU decision on mandatory resettlement quotas in the European Court of Justice.

- How can the European Commission "take revenge" against any Member State government, and does it want to?
- Is it true that the infringement procedures are motivated solely by an aversion to the Orbán government and not by the facts?
- Has the European Commission ever "taken revenge" against any other Member States?