to the Commission

Rule 130

Maria Grapini (S&D)

Subject: Upgrading the EU's security strategy

Over 130 people, including two Romanians, were killed and more than 350 wounded in the attacks which took place in France on the night of Friday, 13 November. Among them were the 80 people killed after being taken hostage at the Bataclan Theatre.

Europe is again facing security threats and challenges, in that it is a prime target for terrorism and organised crime.

In view of these major terrorist risks and the threats to the east of the EU, I feel that the current security strategy should be upgraded as it is no longer commensurate with the new risks and threats that have appeared.

What steps will the Commission take to upgrade the EU's security strategy in order to prevent terrorist attacks such as this happening again?
