Subject: Malnutrition of students in Greek schools

According to a recent public statement by the Greek General Secretary for Welfare, approximately 200,000 students in Greece are facing the problem of malnutrition. In addition to this statement, numerous articles in the Greek and foreign Press refer to a dramatic increase in cases of students with signs of malnutrition, as a result of undernourishment, in schools around the country.

Will the Commission say:

- Is it aware of this dramatic social reality? Are other Member States facing the same problem?
- Which European funding tools could be leveraged in order to effectively tackle this situation and to what extent has Greece made use of all European funds available for this purpose in 2015?
