Subject: Degrading treatment of refugees

Information is reaching me from my constituency about the degrading treatment of refugees, particularly in Hungary. Many refugees are reporting that in Hungary they were forced to sign documents whose language and substance they did not understand because they were not provided with a translator to help them. In addition, they were detained in a camp until they signed the documents and gave their fingerprints.

1. Is the Commission aware of such practices being employed in Hungary or any other Member State?
2. Does the Commission regard these practices as breaches of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union?
3. Does the Commission plan to take steps to halt these practices? If so, what steps exactly?
