Subject: Jean-Claude Juncker plays down figures for migration flows from Turkey

The number of refugees arriving from Turkey would seem to have halved if a graph used by Commission President Jean-Claude Juncker is to be believed. The graph does indeed show a fall in the number of refugees arriving after the EU-Turkey Summit at the end of November, to which Mr Erdogan came to set out what he wanted from Brussels. But this graph is totally at odds with figures issued by the UN High Commissioner for Refugees.

Does the Commission envisage introducing tangible measures to guarantee the transparency of genuine figures on immigration in the European Union?
