

Question for written answer E-015713/2015
to the Commission
Rule 130
David Casa (PPE)

Subject: Elimination of radicalisation through education

A number of studies have shown that higher education helps people broaden their minds in the globalisation era. Individuals can acquire the ability to choose aspects of modernity to incorporate in their daily lives. Most of the young men that are recruited to terrorist organisations are poorly educated and unemployed.

Does the Commission consider education a viable approach to tackling radicalism?