Subject: Designating a European Year of Tourism - Follow-up question

In its reply to my question E-011548/2015 about designating 2018 as the European Year of Tourism¹ the Council stated that 'European years usually receive financial support from the EU budget, and therefore require a legislative act for which the Commission has the sole right of initiative. The Council is therefore awaiting the Commission's proposal which it will examine with due attention'.

In the Commission's reply to the same question (E-005533/2015)², it stated that 'such an initiative requires support and approval both from the European Parliament and from the Member States'.

The Parliament has given its support to this initiative by voting in favour of the report of 22 September 2015 on new challenges and concepts for the promotion of tourism in Europe, which calls on the Commission to consider such an initiative.

The Council is clearly waiting for the Commission's initiative.

Given these circumstances, will the Commission consider designating a European Year of Tourism?

If so, would it consider designating 2018 as the European Year of Cultural Heritage and Tourism?
