Subject: Promoting better interaction between students on the Erasmus+ programme and local students

It is widely known that one of the objectives of the Erasmus+ programme is to encourage intercultural dialogue between local and international students in order to strengthen the overall experience of studying abroad.

However, a large number of universities still run programmes intended exclusively for Erasmus+ students, thereby isolating them from local students at the same university.

How does the Commission plan to put forward guidelines for the reorganisation of the programme and courses in order to promote better interaction between local and international students?
