

Question for written answer E-015666/2015
to the Commission
Rule 130
Daniel Buda (PPE)

Subject: Terrorism

The recent major resurgence of terrorist attacks has now clearly shown itself to be the greatest non-conventional threat at international level. While the primary purpose of terrorism is to terrorise, it is also being fuelled by media coverage bestowing on it a degree of political legitimacy and international recognition. In the wake of the terrorist attacks of March 2004 in Madrid, July 2005 in London and especially November 2015 in Paris, there can be no doubt that Romania is also facing a similar threat to its security. Radicalisation and extremism are spreading extremely fast and are now likely to gain ground in Romania and other European countries.

What measures are being taken or envisaged by Commission with a view to developing cross-border cooperation in the fight against terrorism?
