Subject: Review of support given to countries wishing to join the EU

The Commission still gives economic and political support to countries that wish to join the EU. Many of the countries which are now EU Member States received support from the EU before they joined to carry out economic and democratic reforms, and modernise their legal systems and public administration.

Has the Commission assessed the result of these requests and the effectiveness of the financial support in those countries? If so, what was the outcome of this assessment, and will the Commission be making any changes in consequence?
